GLOBAL LEADERSHIP WORKSHOP: Bridging Distance & Differences

Business Today Demands That You Bridge the Global Divide

It's important to alter your leadership style when communicating with your global teams, and making these changes can be a challenge without the proper context. The Global Leadership Workshop: Bridging Distance & Differences will give you the necessary tools to help you fine-tune your leadership message while you convey your vision and build strong interpersonal connections. This unique program will teach you to lead:

- Culturally diverse teams
- Multi-generational teams
- Men and women
- Globally distributed teams

Format

Taught by Professor Patrick Moreton, the workshop draws on research in sociology, psychology, organizational behavior, and political science. The curriculum is based on the long-standing Duke Leadership Program that was co-developed by Fuqua faculty Allan Lind and Sim Sitkin. You'll start the program by:

- Completing a pre-workshop survey on the cultural differences that exist between you and your teams.
- Building on the six dimensions of leadership to help you design behaviors and approaches that help bridge the cultural gap.
- Developing a "road map" to help you build a unique, personalized action plan that will increase your cultural awareness and sensitivity.

Learning Outcomes

This three-day workshop will bolster your intercultural competencies by helping you:

- Lead across distance and difference
- Lead younger and older reports and associates
- Understand how cultural differences affect leadership best practices
- Appreciate others' cultural values
- Understand the differences between leading women and leading men
- Modify your leadership style to reach people of different disciplines or professional training
